Society Is Expected To Patronize Liberally Showings of "Kismet"

Ex-Service Men at Local Institutions to Receive Benefits From Receipts of Two Performances.

All branches of society will be represented Wednesday afternoon at one or other of the two presentations of "Kismet"—Otis Skinner the star—at Crandall's Knickerbocker Theater, at 18th street and Columbia road, at 4 o'clock, under the auspices of the George Baldwin McCoy Unit, American Women's Legion. Mr. Crandall and the manager, Mr. Eastwood, have given the use of the house for the afternoon, and society folk will show what a privilege it is to help the ex-service men in Mount Alto, Providence, Garfield and Casualty hospitals. The funds realized will go toward furnishing comforts, buying materials and otherwise supplying the needs of the yet dependent men who are being led back to a normal attitude in life.

Mrs. Smith, assistant chief, occupational therapy, with her aids, Miss Dugan from Providence Hospital, Miss Cates from Casualty and Miss Barnes from Mount Alto, with four ex-service men, will exhibit and sell the work of the men in the various hospitals.

obtain one of those splendidly carved refectory tables which are to be found on the market once in a while in London and the continental art centers. The long table with square ends and great lengths of carving stripped crosswise, for insensibility have almost replaced the ornate affairs commonly used and copied from the luxurious days of the "Grande Monarchie" and other Bourbon kings. In California they have long enjoyed a vogue and they are peculiarly adapted to alfresco dining in pergolas and gardens which is a part of the life on the Pacific coast. Happy is the collector who can get two carved benches of corresponding length and design, for then he has the dining room equipment familiar in so many hundreds of great paintings. In all paintings of the Last Supper, a table of this kind is invariably shown, frequently richly carved as in the Venetian masters, yet plain as those still in use in monasteries in the most famous canyons, like that of Leonardo. Many of the ancient chateaus of France still boast Francis the First dining halls, which are certainly a relief from those of later French kings, like the Louvre, in long and narrow and somewhat narrow. Against the four sides of the walls run carved benches, cushioned and divided into chair-like sections by arms and two long tables stretch down the room, with an aisle between, for the servers to move. All such rooms were paneled with an occasional tapestry over the wide open fireplace. Several of the sumptuous new homes in Burlingame, Calif., reproduce this effect and a cool and refreshing apartment it makes.

Wonders as to White House Gardens.

Frequenters of the White House are wondering what changes Mrs. Harding will make in the small private gardens at the south of the White House, which for the past half dozen or more administrations have been regarded as the especial province of the first lady of the land, wherein she may show her individuality in such matters.

This question is one which interests Washington society more than might be supposed. The tennis court, at the south front of the Executive Mansion, installed there by the late President Roosevelt, is being put in condition for President-elect Harding. But by an unwritten law no changes will be made in the lovely formal gardens stretching out on either side of the south balconies until Mrs. Harding gives her personal directions concerning them.

The formal garden to the west, which is quite unique of its kind in Washington, was made in accordance with Mrs. Roosevelt's plans, who during the practically two terms of her making her home in the White House had then filled with every sweet old fashioned flower to be found in the floral category of colonial days.

When President Wilson came to Washington as the chief executive, his first wife, while expressing admiration for this charming space, had decided preference for a rose garden rather than one given over altogether to old fashioned flowers. And thereupon, without altering either the lines of garden or the perfectly kept clipped hedges, had the flowers removed for the rose trees, which still remain intact.

The only time when a President has been known to give his personal directions concerning the planting of these south-front gardens was when the late President Cleveland gave a delightful evidence of a charming sentiment as in response to his orders the small garden to the east of the south balcony created Mrs. Cleveland's eyes upon their return from their honeymoon, laid out in double heart-shaped parterres thickly clustered with heartsease in every shade of that velvet flower. Dolly Madison's taste evidently took on a more substantial tinge, for it was she who first pastured a Jersey cow on the front lawn—President Taft following the example—where during the present administration the Wisconsin sheep have grazed and fattened.

But Dolly Madison had the picturesque idea which none of her successors as first ladies of the land have had so far, and this was to utilize one of the stone wall-in spaces beneath the front portico as her dairy, where, with her Jersey cow in the background, she made fine play of establishing a Petit Trianon and enrolled the belles and beaux of the day to join her in the pretty pretense of butter making.

During the Grant administration the front and back lawns of the White House grounds were given over to the welfare and safety of the Grant children's pony.

The next President to quarter a pony there was President Arthur, who, having received the gift of a piebald Indian thoroughbred pony, bequeathed him to try out the little animal's speed before permitting him to be hitched to the cart for his young daughter Nellie. So, early one autumn morning he mounted the pony, and presto—took a wholly unexpected "Paul Revere" ride out to the Soldiers' Home and back all in one breath.

Later on, in the Roosevelt administration, a piebald Indian pony of gentler inclinations browsed upon the White House lawns when not hitched to young Archie's cart to become a familiar sight to Washingtonians.

Service

—is a word that has been largely overdone to the extent that nowadays one hardly knows just what it means.

At the Arcade Market, Service means the courteous treatment afforded every patron, from their first purchase to their last. It is also expressed in the willingness and pleasure taken in serving you with what you want. And then there are the hundreds of little things which make a regular, steady customer out of a one-time market goer.

We shall be pleased to have you inspect this sanitary market and to add you to the long list of regular customers who have found it worth while to deal at the
